The Act outlines principles for environment management such as precautionary principle; polluter pays principle; and the principle of public participation in development policies, plans and processes for the management of the environment. The Act also will provide for impact and risk assessments, prevention and control of pollution, waste management, environmental quality standards, public participation as well as compliance and enforcement. Once enacted the Act establishes the Environmental Appeals Tribunal and the National Environmental Trust Fund and repeal the National Environment Management Act, 1983.

The Bill proposes an enactment that will put in place conducive environment for the participation of the private sector in the promotion and protection of the environment by providing economic and financial incentives designed to influence behaviour of economic agents that will ensure sustainable use and protection of natural resource.

The Bill contains provisions which recognize the need for the empowerment of the communities to be able to sustainably manage the environment in their respective areas and in the achievement of the goals set for poverty eradication and securing of their livelihoods.

The Bill is divided into XX Parts. Part I deals with preliminary provisions wherein the name of the Act, scope of application and definition of the words and terms used in the Bill are contained.

environmental damage by prescribing measures to minimise environmental damage.

Part VI provides for Environmental Impact Assessment which is recognized under several international environmental agreements as a tool for systematic examination which is conducted to determine whether or not a programme, activity or project will have any adverse impacts on the environment and their mitigation. The Act makes elaborate provisions on projects that will require prior environmental assessments and categorically provides that only registered experts or firms of experts will be allowed to conduct environmental impact assessments.
